In The Fragility of Manhood, Greven has two projects that he wants to develop by focusing on minor and major fictions by Hawthorne. The psychoanalytic part of this project contributes to the ongoing recuperation of the concept of narcissism from the versions of Freudianism that associated it with femininity and homosexuality as inferior and pathological subject positions.

Merging psychoanalytic and queer theory perspectives, The Fragility of Manhood: Hawthorne, Freud, and the Politics of Gender reframes Nathaniel Hawthorne's work as a critique of the normative construction of American male identity. Revising Freudian and Lacanian literary theory and establishing the concepts of narcissism and the gaze as central, David Greven argues that Hawthorne represents normative masculinity as fundamentally dependent on the image.
