J. J. Jonas The Twelve Archetypes

Jung called this process "individuation," the process of becoming the true individual that one really is. This "true self" Jung felt to be the dynamic factor in the unconscious of each individual. It represents the central archetype of order and wholeness among the other archetypes. Jung called it the Self.

In his autobiography, Jung writes: I had explained the myths of peoples of the past; I had written a book about the hero, the myth in which man has always lived. But in what myth does man live nowadays? In the Christian myth, the answer might be, "Do you live in it?" I asked myself. To be honest, the answer was no. For me, it is not what I live by.

A Dangerous New Myth is Emerging: The Return of the Titans

A Jungian definition of myth would be: Myths express characters and stories that are encoded into the human species in prehistory, and therefore express universal concerns. For example, there are some fringe stories about the Greek god Dionysus, in which he is a reborn reincarnation of a slain god Zagreus.
